Must-Try Local Dishes

Street Food & Snacks:

- Dholl Puri: Arguably the most iconic Mauritian street food! These thin, soft flatbreads made from ground split peas are typically served in pairs, filled with a flavourful bean curry (gros pois), a tangy tomato chutney (satini pomme d'amour), and sometimes pickled vegetables (achard). You'll find vendors selling these everywhere, especially in markets and near bus stations.
- Roti (Farata): Another popular flatbread, often thicker and flakier than dholl puri. It's served with various curries (meat, fish, or vegetable) and chutneys. A satisfying and affordable meal on the go.
- Gateaux Piments (Chili Cakes): Crispy, deep-fried lentil cakes infused with fresh chillies and herbs like coriander and spring onions. They offer a spicy kick and are a perfect snack with a cold drink. Found in most local snack shops ("gato lakwizin").
- Samoosas: Triangular pastries filled with spiced vegetables, meat (chicken, beef, or lamb), or fish. A common snack with Indian origins, widely available.
- Bajia: Similar to pakoras, these are fritters made from various vegetables (eggplant, spinach, potatoes) coated in a spiced chickpea flour batter and deep-fried until golden brown.
- Mine Frites (Fried Noodles): A popular and satisfying dish with Chinese influence. Stir-fried egg noodles with vegetables, soy sauce, and often chicken, shrimp, or beef. You'll find variations everywhere.
- Boulettes (Dumplings): Another Chinese-inspired favourite. These steamed or boiled dumplings come in various forms, often made with fish, shrimp, or vegetables. Try the "boulettes chouchou" (chayote dumplings) which are particularly local. Served with a flavorful broth and chili sauce.
- Puri Bhaji: A North Indian dish that has become a Mauritian staple, especially for breakfast or a light meal. Deep-fried puffed bread (puri) served with a flavourful and slightly spicy potato curry (bhaji).
- Kulfi: A dense and creamy frozen dairy dessert, similar to ice cream but richer. Often flavoured with cardamom, pistachio, or mango. A refreshing treat on a warm day.

Main Dishes:

- Fish Vindaye: A tangy and flavourful fish curry marinated in mustard seeds, vinegar, garlic, ginger, and turmeric. Often made with tuna or other firm white fish. It's a dish that keeps well and the flavours deepen over time.
- Chicken or Seafood Curry (various styles): Mauritian curries are diverse, reflecting the island's Indian heritage. You'll find creamy coconut-based curries, spicy tomato-based curries, and everything in between, often featuring local spices like cumin, coriander, turmeric, and chili. Try a prawn curry, octopus curry, or a classic chicken curry.
- Lamb Rogan Josh: A rich and aromatic lamb curry with Kashmiri origins, adapted with local spices. Often slow-cooked until the lamb is tender and the sauce is deeply flavourful.

- Rougaille: A tomato-based stew, often featuring sausages (saucisse), salt fish (poisson salé), or seafood. It's typically spiced with garlic, ginger, onions, and thyme and served with rice. "Rougaille poisson salé" is a particularly popular local version.
- Briani: A fragrant mixed rice dish cooked with meat (chicken, lamb, or fish), yogurt, saffron, and aromatic spices. Often served during special occasions and celebrations. The Mauritian briani has its own distinct flavour profile.
- Mine Bouillie (Boiled Noodles): A lighter noodle dish, often served in a flavorful broth with vegetables, meat or seafood, and garnished with fresh herbs. A comforting and wholesome meal.
- Palm Heart Salad (Salade de Palmiste): A delicacy made from the tender heart of the palm tree. It has a delicate, slightly nutty flavour and is often served as a salad with vinaigrette. Harvesting palm hearts is regulated to ensure sustainability.
- Smoked Marlin: Marlin is a popular fish in Mauritius, and smoked marlin is a delicious delicacy often served thinly sliced as an appetizer or in salads.

 - Bois Chéri Tea: A locally grown tea, especially the vanilla-flavoured black tea, is a popular choice.
